Secret to successful transanal irrigation

One of the key factors to ensure that transanal irrigation is successful and has a positive impact on quality of life for the patient, is training.

Clemence Bildstein (2017) and team in their paper "Predictive factors for compliance with transanal irrigation for the treatment of defaecation disorders" concluded that the "only predictive factor for discontinuing transanal irrigation was the progress of training." The paper goes on to suggest that the first training session for patients should carry structure.

As a company we are here to help build confidence in the use of our product range and have found great success with our own training programme for healthcare professionals (HCP's), which increases theoretical and practical knowledge. As a result, structured teaching programmes are emerging for patients. Therefore, promoting a greater understanding and confidence on how to use each product with ease.

Qufora helping patients to achieve positive outcomes

At Qufora we understand the importance of feeling independent and confident to enjoy life. The Qufora IrriSedo systems enables your patients to manage their bowels and feel confident to live a fulfilled life.

We would like to share with you one of our Qufora patients' success stories:

"Using the Qufora system after my ileostomy reversal has significantly changed the quality of my life. With a job that involves long meetings and international travel plus having a young family, the irrigation kit means that I have far fewer incidences of painful constipation or sudden diarrhea. Now I can start to live something approaching a normal life again without having to always be close to a toilet. The system is simple and easy to use, just requiring 20 minutes or so each day and giving me up to 24 hours before my next bowel movement. For patients suffering with the unpredictable and embarrassing effects following bowel surgery, this is an option I would thoroughly recommend trying."
