The BIG Constipation Survey

Continuing with the theme of constipation from our last newsletter we would like to present some interesting statistics from a 'Constipation Survey' conducted by the 'Bowel Interest Group' (BIG) in June 2019. The survey included 147 healthcare professionals from primary care with 98 of the 147 being GP's. Some of the results showed the following:

- 6.3 patients on average per week are being treated for constipation (Range of 0-70 appointments per week)
- 20.4% advised that the biggest challenge in managing patients with constipation was the lack of guidelines, volume of patients (16.3%), lack of continence services for continuing care

(10.9%) and knowledge on appropriate treatments (10.9%)

- 47.6% felt that it would be helpful to have access to integrated continence services.

Conducting such a survey gives us an insight into the needs of the healthcare professional in managing constipation. Perhaps it is time to consider developing guidelines/pathways similar to the 'RCS Commissioning guide for faecal incontinence', which defines the different sectors of treatment options for both primary and secondary care. Developing well-defined documents will help in standardising treatment options and promote integration across services. As a result, this has the potential to drive cost efficient through the NHS and significantly benefit the patient in their treatment.

Thank you to the Bowel Interest Group for raising much needed awareness of constipation. Now is the time for us all to work together in resolving what clearly is an astounding problem. Click here to read a full report.
