Healthwatch: people's experiences of continence care

All too often we hear how bowel dysfunction can have an impact on an individual's quality of life. It is also recognised that bowel symptoms can be exacerbated by the associated taboo and a lack of understanding/knowledge, which as a result can only encourage unfavourable opinions on continence care services.

Healthwatch have recently published a report on shared experiences in health and social care with an 'in focus' section specifically looking at continence care. I am saddened how negatively the public view the care for both faecal and urinary incontinence. Is it not time for us all to pull together to make changes, especially when in my opinion we have so many excellent services within the National Health Service?

My only regret is that I didn't know about your Qufora system sooner

We had such a pleasure speaking to one of our Qufora users and really wanted to share his story with you. Tony had his life turned upside down after a back operation which damaged a nerve and effected his bladder and bowels.

"The bowel problem I have suffered has had a significant impact on my work life, home life, confidence and dignity which has also caused some mental challenges. The Professor of Neurology who I was referred to recognised all my symptoms, but in respect of my bowel management recommended your product.

I reluctantly started to use the product with some trepidation, but quickly got into a routine that fits my lifestyle, and don't exaggerate when I say that I feel I have my life back. The difference this has made to my physical and mental well being has surprised and staggered me" Tony

Education days for your diary.

Our Qufora team were very busy this year attending numerous local and international conferences. We had many very valuable conversations with the patients suffering from bowel dysfunctions and healthcare professionals trying to help these patients. We hope that we have helped lots of healthcare professionals by sharing our knowledge and experience with the bowel management.

Our team will be meeting you at the following events in 2020 if you are attending. You can register for these events by clicking on the links
