Development of an adolescent biofeedback service to manage bowel dysfunction in younger patients

This month in the Gastrointestinal Nursing Journal Rebecca Knox highlights how a biofeedback service has been developed at St Marks Hospital for managing bowel dysfunction in adolescents. The article emphasises the stages of development, the differing needs for adolescents, the importance of transition from paediatric to adult services, along with the fundamental language and literature to be used when assessing and treating this group of patients. Careful consideration has also been applied to the need for parental involvement and the desired environment for appointments. A well written article that displays all the information required for setting up a service in managing adolescent bowel dysfunction, which is often overlooked when it comes to transitioning from paediatric to adult services. Well done Rebecca for identifying the need and getting such a service on the bowel dysfunction map.

Qufora® IrriSedo Klick

Your new choice of Rectal Irrigation system!

Qufora helping patients to achieve positive outcomes

At Qufora we understand the importance of feeling independent and confident to enjoy life. The Qufora IrriSedo systems enables your patients to manage their bowels and feel confident to live a fulfilled life. We would like to share with you one of our Qufora patients' success stories:

"Using the Qufora system after my ileostomy reversal has significantly changed the quality of my life. With a job that involves long meetings and international travel plus having a young family, the irrigation kit means that I have far fewer incidences of painful constipation or sudden diarrhea. Now I can start to live something approaching a normal life again without having to always be close to a toilet. The system is simple and easy to use, just requiring 20 minutes or so each day and giving me up to 24 hours before my next bowel movement. For patients suffering with the unpredictable and embarrassing effects following bowel surgery, this is an option I would thoroughly recommend trying."
